Interviewer: The Food Programme has been on Radio 4 since the late seventies. Whose idea was it?

Derek: I had the idea of The Food Programme many years ago when I was working in Scotland. It was first transmitted on Scottish television in 1976 and it went on to Radio 4 in 1979.

Interviewer: Why do you like Scotland and especially the Isle of Skye so much?

Derek: My mother's parents came from India and moved to the Hebrides and I have good memories of Skye because I spent all my childhood there - when I wasn't at school yet.

Interviewer: How do you see the role of The Food Programme?

Derek: It has always included such topics as gastronomy, ecology, economics and social conditions. You cannot talk about food in Britain without admitting that many people can't afford to buy good, wholesome food, which includes fruit and vegetables, because it's expensive. You also can't talk about food without finding out how this food is produced around the world.

Interviewer: You also talk a lot about organic food. When did your interest start?

Derek: We interviewed Lady Eve Balfour who was ninety. As a young lady she bought a farm in south-east England and started farming organically. We sat by the fire in her living room and she talked about organic food and I listened and thought that it was definitely the way forward.

Zadanie 2.

Destination one

The pace of life is what attracts most visitors to one of the smallest of the Greek islands - Paxos. It's so small in fact that it has no airport. The nearest is the one neighbouring island of Corfu.

Destination two

You don't have to jump on a plane to get away from it all. If you know where to look, you can find perfect isolation closer to home. Pembrokeshire in South Wales is famous for its footpaths which takes weeks to walk... just perfect for one man and his dog.

Destination three

In the Indian Ocean, a thousand miles off the coast of East Africa you'll find a group of 115 islands - the Seychelles. They have a reputation for all year round government controlled tourism, but it's not a cheap place to visit.

Destination four

Swedish Lapland, 100 miles inside the Arctic Circle is a place where temperatures can go as low as -40°C. But still holidaymakers come here to stay in the Ice Hotel, a giant igloo which is rebuilt every six months after it melts in summer.

Destination five

With huge population plus millions of visitors every year, Hong Kong is a lively and colourful place. Public transport is cheap, fast and efficient. There are loads of information centres, with handy free maps and guides.

LITTLE TUK

Now, there was a little Tuk. One day he had to look after his sister Gustave, who was much smaller than he was, and then he had his lessons to do, but these two things were rather difficult to manage at the same time. The poor boy sat with his sister on his lap and sang all the songs he knew, at the same time glancing at his geography book, which was open in front of him. Before the next morning he had to know all the towns in the island of Zealand by heart, and everything there was to know about them.

At last his mother came home, for she had been out, and then she took little Gustave. Tuk ran to the window and read as hard as he could, for it was getting dark, and mother could not afford to buy candles.

"There's the old washerwoman from the lane," said his mother, as she looked out of the window. "She can hardly walk and yet she has to carry a bucket from the pump; run down little Tuk, help the old woman!"

Tuk jumped at once and ran to help her, but when he got home again it was quite dark, and as it was useless to talk about candles, he had to go to bed. He had an old turn-up bed, and he lay thinking about his geography lesson, the island of Zealand, and all that the teacher had told him. He ought to learn his lesson, but of course it was impossible now. He put the geography book under his pillow, because he had heard that this would help him considerably to remember the lesson.

He lay there thinking, and then at once it seemed to him someone kissed him on his eyes and his mouth, and he fell asleep, yet he was not quite asleep either...
